

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

What's happening at rarebooks.info?

March 27, 2009--Paris, France

The publisher Rarebooks.info, The Digital Library of Reference Works on Rare Books, continues to expand its subscription base throughout the world. New subscribers include, for the first time, institutions in the Far East. Institutions that subscribe to www.rarebooks.info now include libraries in the Northern and Southern Hemispheres from Finland to New Zealand and those extending from East to West from Singapore to California. Subscribers include most national libraries, many university research libraries, as well as other public and private libraries throughout the world. The subscription option of Perpetual Access continues to offer an appealing option to new and ongoing subscribers. Michel Demont, CEO of Rarebooks.info states "In today's economic climate, our database emerges as an attractive alternative to the acquisition of expensive bibliographic resources and to travel for the purpose of consulting hard-to-find reference works."

Officers of rarebooks.info will be available at the New York Antiquarian Book Fair held at the Park Avenue Armory from April 2 to April 5, 2009 to answer questions (Sandra Hindman, Director of International Operations of Rarebooks.info and President of Les Enluminures, Stand A9). Also attending the New York Antiquarian Book Fair, Michel Demont, CEO of Rarebooks.info, states "We continue to be committed to our faithful following of booksellers who recognize the value of the site for describing a book and identifying its rarity from a computer post anywhere in the world."

The Library Journal gave www.rarebooks.info a "ten" on content alone ("the content is truly extraordinary") and noted that research libraries "will better serve their clientele" by subscribing to the database. The Library Journal also recommended www.rarebooks.info for smaller libraries "not owning the original works."

About Rarebooks.info:

Founded in 2001, Rarebooks.info is privately held and headquartered in Paris, France.

www.rarebooks.info offers 101 titles for bibliographic research. The titles are available in facsimile for full-text searching by keyword, as well as author, title, date, etc. Users can also search by topics, including Art and Architecture, Catalogues (Sales), Early Printers, Literature, Natural History, and others. This unique database presents a comprehensive library of 100 of the most useful reference works in the field. Unlike Google Books, Rarebooks.info makes possible sophisticated and focused searches in a wide range of bibliographic material.

For further information

subscriptions@rarebooks.info